Sector	Agriculture, forestry and other land uses (AFOLU)
Type of Project	Forest Restoration
Project description	CO2Bio is a grouped project that prevents deforestation, forest degradation, and the transformation of wetlands in the plains of the Colombian Orinoquia region, starting with an area of 20,206 hectares of Forest and 63,328 hectares of Wetlands. These goals are achieved through the implementation of climate change mitigation and conservation activities which reduce the threat factors on natural ecosystems and their biodiversity while minimizing the environmental pressures that cause habitat loss. At a social level, CO2Bio guarantees that local landowners receive economic incentives that contribute to their quality of life and promote sustainable rural development as an alternative to the agricultural expansion in the region.

Location	The project area is located in the Orinoco River basin, in the Colombian departments of Casanare, Arauca, Meta and Vichada.
Project participants	The project holder is the Cataruben Foundation, an environmental organization with more than eight years of presence in the Colombian Orinoquia, which promotes biodiversity conservation through the implementation of climate change mitigation projects. One hundred and forty-one (141) private landowners in the Colombian Orinoquia who have voluntarily decided to join efforts to implement natural ecosystem conservation activities on their land to ensure the conservation of carbon stocks and the permanence of biodiversity.
